Introduction

The City of La Cañada Flintridge, California (City) has implemented a Pavement Management Program (PMP) to update a pavement condition assessment last conducted in 2023. The analysis indicates that the City’s overall pavement network currently has a network-level Pavement Condition Index (PCI) of 60, which falls within the Fair category.

Maintenance recommendations are provided for each roadway segment based on both surface type and existing condition. Each recommended maintenance strategy is assigned a unit cost derived from recent local construction bid data to estimate maintenance and rehabilitation (M&R) expenditures. These cost estimates inform the development of various pavement maintenance scenarios that account for distinct budgetary constraints and performance objectives. The evaluated scenarios include: (1) $2.5 M, (2) $5.1 M, and (3) $8.6 M for 5 and 10 years.

This report summarizes the pavement condition evaluation and the current state of the City of La Cañada’s roadway infrastructure, emphasizing the findings of the latest PMP assessment. It details the applied methodology, major outcomes, and recommended approaches for preserving and enhancing pavement conditions citywide. Through the presentation of data-driven scenarios and budget analyses, this report is intended to facilitate informed decision-making concerning the management and rehabilitation of La Cañada’s street network.

Methodology

The City of La Cañada’s roadway network was assessed utilizing the industry-standard ASTM D6433 Standard Practice for Roads and Parking Lots Pavement Condition Index Surveys. This approach integrated automated data collection technologies, with trained field personnel employing IrisPRO Pave vehicles and equipment for the evaluation. Pavement distress types, quantities, and severities were systematically recorded to calculate the Pavement Condition Index (PCI) value for each street. A PCI of 100 denotes a roadway in excellent condition, whereas a value of 0 indicates failure. PCI values are subsequently grouped into condition categories, as shown in Table 1. M&R work is generally prioritized according to a section’s PCI value and its relative importance within the overall network.

Table 1: PCI Categories

Condition Category	PCI Range
Good	86 – 100
Satisfactory	71 – 85
Fair	56 – 70
Poor	0 – 55

Pavement conditions deteriorate progressively due to factors such as traffic loads, environmental influences, and other elements that compromise the pavement's structural integrity and supporting layers. M&R actions can mitigate or even reverse this deterioration. Implementing a pavement management program allows for systematic application of preventive maintenance treatments prior to the development of significant distresses, therefore maintaining pavement condition and potentially reducing long-term repair costs.

Figure 1 illustrates the financial implications of conducting repairs at various stages within the pavement life cycle. Proper pavement maintenance conserves financial resources by facilitating the application of economically efficient measures, such as surface treatments and crack sealing, to preserve existing conditions. Delaying preventive maintenance interventions often results in accelerated pavement deterioration and significantly higher costs due to the need for more intensive treatments.

Network Inventory

Terminology

To implement an effective pavement management program, a structured hierarchy is typically established to organize the network into segments sharing similar characteristics. Inventory management operates within a tiered framework comprising networks, branches, and sections, with the section serving as the smallest unit of oversight. The segmentation of the pavement management network adheres to these organizational definitions. This hierarchy includes networks, branches, sections, and sample units, each defined as follows.

Pavement Network

A pavement network includes all roadway segments under the City's management. A network consists of one or more pavement branches, which are comprised of one or many pavement sections. The network is the starting point of the hierarchy of pavement management organization.

Pavement Branch

A pavement branch, or street, is a logical unit of generally identifiable pavement within a network with a distinct functional classification or use. For example, each road within a network is considered a separate branch. Each branch contains at least one section.

Pavement Section

A pavement section is a subdivision of a branch and has consistent characteristics and condition levels throughout its area. These characteristics include structural composition (pavement layer material type and thickness), construction history, age, traffic type and frequency, and pavement condition. Sections are typically organized on a block-to-block basis. A section is the basic management unit of a pavement network and is the level at which M&R treatments are considered.

Pavement Sample

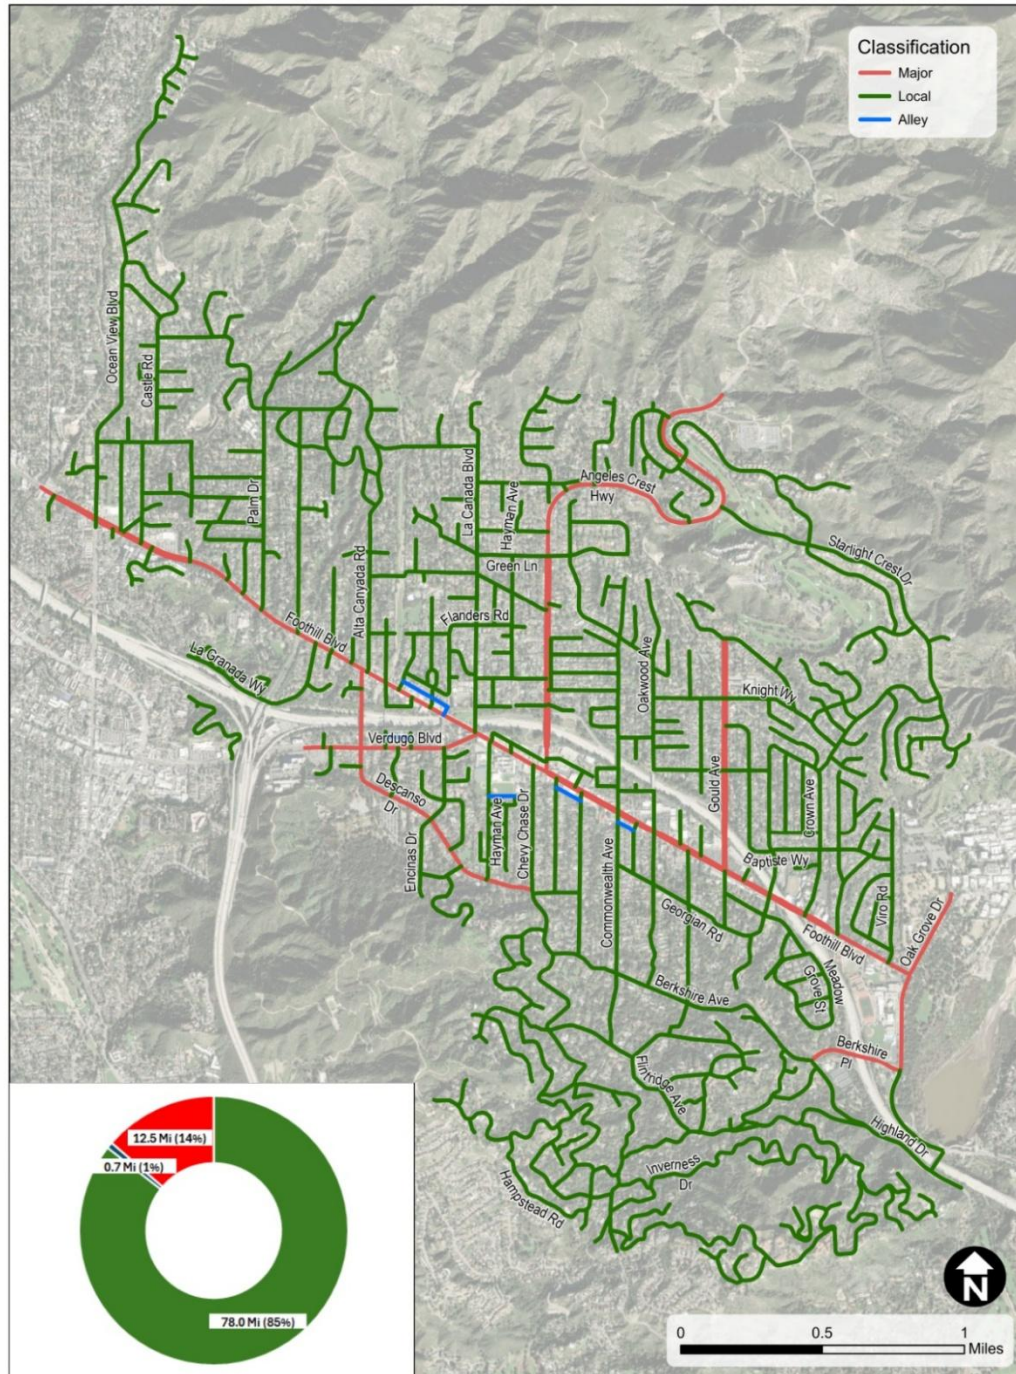

Pavement samples are collected on a continuous basis in the driven lane. Most roadway samples were collected in a single pass, with bi-directional collection occurring on arterial and collector roadways. A continuous sampling approach allows for greater accuracy in distress identification and characterization.

Inventory Summary

Prior to commencing data collection, Kimley-Horn partnered with the City to develop a detailed inventory of the existing roadway network. The roads were divided into sections based on distinct characteristics such as surface type, paving history, usage, and traffic. Each section comprises pavement segments constructed with either asphalt concrete (AC) or Portland cement concrete (PCC). This methodology supported the creation of a GIS shapefile that includes linear segmentation on a block-by-block basis and helps identify specific roadway segments for data collection. Approximately 91 centerline miles of roadway data were collected and broken up into 738 individual sections.

Functional Classification

Roadways in La Cañada are classified as arterials, collectors, and local roads. Figure 2 illustrates the spatial breakdown of roadway classification throughout the City and distribution by centerline miles. The City contains approximately 12.5 miles of arterial or collector roadways, 78.0 miles of local roadways, and 0.7 miles of alleyway.

Surface Type

Figure 3 shows the breakdown of pavement surface types in the City. There are approximately 0.72 miles (1%) of Portland cement concrete roads and 90.51 miles (99%) of asphalt concrete roads.

Data Collection

The data collection process identifies pavement distress types, extent, and severity levels, which collectively determine the PCI value. The PCI methodology offers a comprehensive assessment of pavement conditions in response to traffic, environmental influences, and various contributing factors. The PCI method does not estimate remaining structural life, bearing capacity, or characteristics of subgrade support. These aspects require additional testing methods that fall outside the scope of this study. Nonetheless, surface distresses observed during evaluation provide insight into the performance of the pavement system and its underlying support layers.

For this project, the ASTM D6433 procedure was implemented to derive PCI values. Table 2 outlines the pavement distresses considered during field evaluations, with load-related distresses highlighted in bold.

PCI field evaluations were conducted in January 2026. Evaluations were performed using an IRIS PROPave data collection vehicle, as seen in Figure 4. These vehicles capture forward, rear, and side-facing imagery while scanning the pavement surface using advanced sensor technologies.

The Laser Crack Measurement System (LCMS-2) is used for pavement surface imaging, enabling capabilities such as detecting cracks and joints, analyzing lane markings, and identifying manmade objects. An inertial profiling system, which works in tandem with the LCMS-2 and other data collection tools, obtains International Roughness Index (IRI) and longitudinal profile measurements. Figure 5 illustrates the LCMS-2 pavement imaging system.

A Ladybug 5+ camera system captures right-of-way images, enabling complete 360-degree reality recording. The system can deliver images oriented frontward, backward, or sideways, depending on what the City requires. It ensures continuous, full-width coverage along the travel direction. For certain arterials and collectors, data was gathered traveling both ways, while for local and residential streets, it was collected only in one direction.

Through the Connect software platform, these various data streams are brought together. This integration allows users to thoroughly examine imagery, condition information, and other relevant details within an intuitive online environment, as illustrated in Figure 6.

The types of pavement distress commonly identified within the City network primarily result from load, climatic conditions, construction practices, and additional contributing factors. Load-related distresses stem from both static and dynamic tire interactions with the pavement surface, often signifying deeper issues within the pavement structure that necessitate more extensive remediation. Climate-induced distresses are typically associated with temperature fluctuations and oxidation of the asphalt binder. Additional sources of distress include construction activities or utility maintenance. Distresses related to climate, construction, or utilities generally manifest at the surface level and usually require less intensive treatments.

Condition Results

Based on the data collection process, Pavement Condition Index (PCI) scores were determined for each roadway segment. The overall citywide PCI is 60, classifying the network as "Fair." Among the segments, 24.9% are rated as good, 21.2% satisfactory, 9.9% fair, and 44% poor. Notably, one roadway has failed (Austin Street, which has a PCI of 9). Figure 7 shows the overall graphical distribution of PCI values within the La Cañada network. Figure 8 also displays the PCI distribution within the La Cañada network but also breaks it down by functional class.

The City has both asphalt and concrete roadways, both of which require unique maintenance and reconstruction activities depending on their PCI. Figure 9 displays the PCI distribution by pavement surface type, specifically comparing Asphalt Concrete (AC) on the left and Portland Cement Concrete (PCC) on the right. The chart illustrates that a larger proportion of AC roadways fall into the poor category, while PCC roadways have a greater share rated as fair or satisfactory. Additionally, almost half of the PCC roadways are classified as fair. Nearly, half of the PCC roadways are classified as fair, indicating that many concrete streets may require preventative maintenance or rehabilitation in the near future. Overall, the data in Figure 9 helps prioritize pavement management strategies by highlighting which surface types may require more immediate attention or different maintenance approaches. Understanding these differences enables the City to allocate resources more effectively for future repairs and rehabilitation efforts.

Summaries of pavement conditions are provided for each roadway segment to emphasize the status of individual sections. Appendix B contains detailed results organized by condition category, while Appendix C presents these outcomes alphabetically. A spatial overview of the network-wide findings is illustrated in Figure 10, with a full-resolution version available in Appendix A.

Maintenance Recommendations

Implementing a maintenance strategy that preserves roads in optimal condition and addresses backlog will provide ongoing benefits to the City and continues to be a key strategic objective. Considering the diverse pavement conditions across the City, employing a varied approach to repairs is necessary to effectively address these deficiencies. The City may evaluate and adopt the maintenance strategies detailed below.

Asphalt Concrete (AC) Treatments

- Crack Seal – A polymer-or asphalt-based material is used like caulk to fill and seal cracks in the pavement surface. Some cracks are too small to effectively seal, so crack sealing is often combined with a slurry seal or other surface treatment to cover and seal these hairline cracks
- Surface Seal – Involves applying a pre-mixed, polymer-modified slurry to the roadway surface to address surface distresses such as surface cracks and raveling
- Patching/Dig Out – Localized areas of fatigue or alligator cracking are removed and replaced to restore the pavement’s structural integrity. These repairs are cost-effective when small and localized, but quickly become cost prohibitive as the repair area increases
- Mill and Overlay – One of the most common forms of AC rehabilitation, this treatment involves the use of a milling machine to remove the top few inches of asphalt. Once milled, a new asphalt surface is installed to create a smooth riding surface free of defects
- Reconstruction – A pavement is a reconstruction candidate when it has significant amounts of structural cracking. It involves removal of the asphalt layer, base course, and potentially some underlying subgrade. The result is a new road with a 20- to 30-year lifespan depending on traffic and underlying conditions

Portland Cement Concrete (PCC) Treatments

- Crack Seal – Similar to AC treatments, a polymer-or asphalt-based material is used like caulk to fill and seal cracks in the pavement surface
- Joint Seal – PCC sealants are used to reduce surface water infiltration and unwanted materials flowing into joints. Common sealing materials include polymeric asphalt-based sealant and coal tar
- Slab Replacement – When multiple cracks intersect on the pavement and divide the slab into several pieces, replacing the entire slab may be preferable to sealing
- Reconstruction – A pavement is a reconstruction candidate when it has significant amounts of structural cracking. It involves removal of all layers, base course, and potentially some underlying soil. The result is a new road with a 30- to 40-year lifespan depending on traffic and underlying conditions

Maintenance and Repair (M&R) Costs

The development of a multi-year M&R plan requires the assessment of material cost estimates and the establishment of maintenance policies. Unit costs for M&R treatment materials were compiled using data supplied by the City, supplemented with engineering judgment. Table 3 presents the unit cost details for City roadway pavements, which will inform the analysis of various budget scenarios.

Table 3: Assumed M&R Types

Treatment Assigned	Treatment Type	Unit Cost ($/SF Pavement)
None	New Construction Initial	$0.00
Minor Rehabilitation	1.5" Grind and Overlay	$4.60
Major Rehabilitation	Full-Depth Reclamation (FDR)	$9.90

M&R policies combined with existing pavement conditions determine the appropriate timing for implementing M&R treatments on specific pavement sections. As pavement conditions decline, more extensive and costly M&R interventions become necessary to address the deterioration effectively. Planning-level unit costs for various M&R treatments are provided in Table 4 and were developed based on contractor bid tabs provided by the City for construction projects completed within the last five years. These tables also indicate typical PCI ranges associated with each treatment. This cost data is utilized to simulate different funding scenarios.

Kimley-Horn does not have control over the labor, materials, equipment, or services provided by others, nor does it influence pricing methods, competitive bidding, or market circumstances. As a result, any cost opinions, including those related to construction and materials, are based on Kimley-Horn's industry experience and represent their professional judgment. Kimley-Horn does not guarantee that proposals, bids, or actual costs won't differ from these cost opinions.

Table 4: AC M&R Treatment Types and Costs by PCI

PCI Range	Treatment Type	Unit Cost ($/SF Pavement)
0-100	New Construction Initial	$0.00
31-61	1.5" Grind and Overlay	$4.60
0-31	Full-Depth Reclamation (FDR)	$9.90

Budget Scenarios

When planning for long-term rehabilitation, the City often needs to answer key questions like: "How much funding will be required in upcoming years to keep pavements above the minimum operational standard with limited resources?” or “Which pavements should be maintained each year?” and “What kind of maintenance and repair (M&R) is appropriate?”

Decision-makers benefit from understanding how changing the minimum acceptable condition affects budget requirements, as well as what different cost analyses reveal. Using DRIVE, a pavement management software developed by Kimley-Horn, various budget scenarios are modeled to show how limiting funds impacts pavement upkeep, or what funds are necessary to reach desired PCI levels. Monetary needs are estimated by identifying when major work is needed for each pavement section, multiplying its area by the relevant unit M&R cost as outlined in Table 4. These budget scenarios guide annual airport funding decisions.

- Budget Scenario: The “Annual Budget Scenario” assigns a set annual funding amount, similar to a city's roadway budget, to evaluate its effect on network PCI. This scenario would only include projects that can fit into the annual budget. DRIVE selects sections for projects based on the PCI values described in Table 4. Annual budgets of $2.5 million, $5.1 million, and $8.6 million were analyzed over 5- and 10-year periods to determine their effect on the citywide PCI.

Summary of Major Rehabilitation Over 5 Years and 10 Years

Six scenarios were analyzed to compare resulting PCI values and associated costs, including work that remains unfunded or is deferred (denoted as backlog). Table 5 presents a summary of these scenarios, while Figure 11 displays projected annual PCI conditions for each scenario. Figure 12 shows the yearly cost breakdown for each scenario, encompassing both funded projects and any unfunded backlog. It should be noted that the funded costs incorporate an annual inflation rate of 3%.

Five-Year Plan Methodology

The direct budget scenario output provides yearly treatment recommendations but ignores proximity and constructability. This results in work scattered throughout the City, which is unrealistic from a construction standpoint. Rather than using the DRIVE results directly as the five-year plan, these outputs are used to determine the City's treatment recommendations in proximity to each other and on the same streets. Starting at Year 1, segments are selected until the annual budget is met. Once the budget is met, selection for the next year begins and the process continues until all projects have been selected. With the exclusion of Foothill Boulevard segments from the five-year plan due to the street being addressed as part of separate projects, the segments can be consolidated into a four-year period.

Five-Year Plan Results

M&R recommendations for each year are based on projected PCI Values from DRIVE. AC M&R recommendations for the street sections each year are developed to align with the City's target annual budget of $2.5 million per year, and are shown in Appendix D. Reprioritized annual treatment costs are approximately $3.6 M in 2027 (council-approved segments), $2.50 M in 2028, $2.51 M in 2029, and $2.48 M in 2030, as shown in Figure 13. The resulting program provides a practical construction schedule while maintaining consistency with the budget scenario developed in DRIVE. No major work is projected to remain for 2031. In 2031 onwards, annual funds can be used for a slurry seal program to continue upkeep and maintenance of the roadway network. A preliminary list of streets recommended for slurry seal treatment are included in Appendix E.

Updated Treatment Year Recommendations and Conclusion

The objective of a pavement management program is to implement the most appropriate treatment for a roadway at the most advantageous time. Maintaining roads in Fair or better condition is more cost-effective than allowing them to deteriorate to Poor or worse states. The findings from this pavement condition evaluation indicate that La Cañada's roadway network is currently assessed as Fair, with a PCI value of 60. Without consistent and strategically allocated funding, roadway conditions are likely to decline further. Pavement conditions across the City are evenly distributed, suggesting recent investments have had positive impacts; however, a considerable backlog persists. Maintenance and repair costs for roads in poorer conditions constitute a significantly higher portion of overall expenditures compared to those maintained at superior standards.

This pavement condition analysis, conducted at the network level, does not substitute for the engineering and planning expertise required for project-level analysis and design. It is important to note that Kimley-Horn does not control labor, materials, equipment costs, or broader market factors. Projects identified for near-term attention should be reviewed by the City individually to ensure network-level recommendations are appropriately aligned with specific project requirements.
